THE FACULTY OF EDUCATION Centre for Education Research (CER) WORKSHOP SERIES

Within Canada and the United States, APA (officially called the American Psychological Association) is the dominant writing style used in the social sciences. Students often solely link this writing format to rules associated with citations and references; however, there is much more to know about this style of writing. Being able to apply APA in written work is a way for students to greatly improve their written communicative abilities and overall academic success. In this presentation, Dr. Preston explains the basic components of APA writing. Threaded throughout the presentation, she will have audience members actively practice their APA knowledge by completing short written tasks.
