HIST2100 The History Workshop: Skills and Methods in History

Fall 2020 - M/W 1:30 PM - 2:45 PM

Dr. Susan Brown

The History Workshop is designed to introduce students to the research methods and approaches that shape the discipline of History. How do historians interpret and present evidence? What kinds of questions do historians ask? Is there such a thing as historical truth? Why does History matter? In addition to increasing your knowledge of how historians practice their craft, you will also be developing your own critical thinking, research and writing skills. Through a series of practical research and writing exercises, including visits to off-campus sites, you will develop skills that will help you to succeed in many of your university courses, as well as in future learning and career development.

Over the past forty years, regional history has emerged as an essential vehicle for getting at the larger story of Canada. But is there truly an “Atlantic Region” in Canada? What is it? How is it defined? Has it always existed? What can we learn from examining this part of the country? Drawing on such disciplines as literature, music, economics, folklore, and, especially, history, this course will explore the politics, economy, and culture of this region during the period since Confederation. It has been a time of challenge, struggle, and self-definition for the region that many observers claim is the “poor sister” of Confederation.
